OUR HISTORY

Metavat was established by Frederick "Fred" Ernest Ehrsam III, is an American business executive and investor who is the co-founder and managing partner of cryptocurrency investment firm Paradigm. He is also the co-founder of cryptocurrency exchange Coinbase and Metavat. The company have over the years been involved in trading Binary Options and real estate initially, till expansion into Forex and Crypto Currency. The Company provides professional forex and crypto trading services through state-of-art trading platform, which is specially developed for investors' convenience.

Metavat is a cutting edge result of global co-activity and converging of corporate interests on the worldwide level. The way of the organization has been begun from a little relationship of similarly invested individuals in the field of exchanging on general wares, merchandise and enterprises.

Over the past 2 decades, we have grown into a reliable asset management company that is able to consistently give more than 14% of the return on the funds invested by investors.

During the development of the company, we managed to create a team of professionals of 98 people and more than 100 trading strategies were developed and introduced into trading practice, many of which remain unique today. As a result of such a successful activity in APRIL, 2011, we managed to close a merger with a promising company specializing in mining and trading with cryptocurrencies. It was the starting point of our development in a new capacity. The result in return on investment capital gave us an opportunity to significantly increase the mining processing power and bring trading strategies to an impeccable level of stability.

Get Loan

Since Bitcoin is not only a form of currency, but also a store of value, it can be used like other assets as collateral for a loan. A Bitcoin loan is similar to a traditional loan offered by banks, except there are hard credit checks, there are no strings attached to the money, and interest rates are the same for everyone. That is because most of the risk is not on the lender but on the borrower, since the borrower is putting up more than enough Bitcoin to cover the loan and interest payments.

How do bitcoin loans work?

To understand how bitcoin loans work, you'll need to understand what bitcoin is. Basically, bitcoin is a cryptocurrency that operates entirely online. It's decentralized, meaning no particular organization, individual or country controls it. This allows bitcoin users to make direct transactions between one another without a third party — like a bank — getting involved. Transactions are recorded and published on an electronic ledger called a blockchain, which anyone can access. The blockchain relies on several anonymous computers — called miners — to verify the legitimacy of transactions before they join the blockchain to prevent fraud. Rather than the blockchain existing on one server, leaving it vulnerable to hackers, it's distributed to all bitcoin users.

On a basic level, bitcoin loans work like your standard term loan: It's borrowed money that you pay back plus interest and fees over a predetermined period of time. You pay it back in fixed installments depending on your loan agreement. You can also get bitcoin lines of credit and short-term bitcoin loans. That's where most of the similarities end. Because bitcoin isn't affiliated with any central government or banking institution, your typical bitcoin loan will be from other bitcoin users. You'll also need to factor any commission on the current exchange rate into your fees.

How to apply for Loan

The easiest way to get a bitcoin loan is through a peer-to-peer platform that connects investors with borrowers, usually for a fee. To borrow through a bitcoin loan platform, you first need to set up an account and wait for verification.

Bitcoin lenders don't rely on the typical ways of judging your creditworthiness, such as your credit score or debt-to-income ratio. Instead, platforms give you a trust score — sometimes called a credit score or rating — based on how much they're able to verify about your identity and financial history. To get a high trust score, you might need to submit extensive documentation.

Once your account is verified, you typically need to select your loan type and submit your application form. You can receive loan offers in as little as a few hours and get your funds instantly once you accept.

What documents will I need?

Because you won't be going through a traditional lender, some of the documentation you'll need to provide to get a bitcoin loan will be different than with a standard loan.

Government-issued ID. A scan of your passport.

Verification of your address. Utility bills in your name.

Verification of income. Recent pay stubs, invoices or tax forms prove your ability to repay a bitcoin loan.

Pay 10% of the said amount you wish to borrow.

Traders

Cryptocurrencies have experienced huge, volatile price swings in recent years. Some crypto traders have thrived from this while others have not. So what exactly separates a successful crypto trader from the rest?

Success as a crypto trader will mean something different for each individual trader. For some, it could be making a profit on a live or demo trading account trading from the 30-minute chart. For others, it could be making a profit from shorting cryptocurrency CFDs. Ultimately though, success will most likely come down to making a profitable return on the capital you risk.

Here at Pumtrox we have carefully selected a group of well know trader with years of experience to help in the day to day trading activities to ensure you get your weekly profits as promised, you have nothing to worry about as we got you covered and you capital is safe.
